GUAR MEAL CHURI

Guar Meal Churi, also known as Guar Korma or Guar Churi, is a by-product obtained during the processing of guar (Cyamopsis tetragonoloba) seeds for guar gum extraction. Guar is a leguminous plant primarily cultivated in India and Pakistan. The guar gum extracted from guar seeds is a widely used thickening and stabilizing agent in various industries, including food, pharmaceuticals, and oil drilling.

Guar Meal Churi is the residual material left after extracting guar gum from the seeds. It consists of the outer husk and germ of the guar seeds and is typically in the form of a coarse powder. This by-product is rich in protein and fiber, making it suitable for use as a feed ingredient in livestock and poultry nutrition.
